Briefly describe the rationale for disestablishment:
Due to the very small number of prospective and enrolled students and the decision that the Lincoln Center will no longer be the handle centralized administration of the program, the School of Public Affairs proposes a disestablishment of the MA in Applied Ethics and the Professions (Leadership, Management and Ethics). Students interested in studying these topics are already well-served by existing graduate programs at ASU, including two within the School of Public Affairs (MPA and MPP programs).

Impact on other existing programs:
May include availability of course content for students in other majors who may need it; other.
Courses offered for this concentration are part of the regularly scheduled course offerings for the MPA degree program. As these classes will still continue to be offered, there should be no impact on other programs.

Impact on current students:
Estimate number of students still enrolled; anticipated date of last graduates; arrangements for continuing students and students in articulated transfer pathways (e.g., MAPP, TAG).
There is currently one student enrolled in the program with an expected graduation date of May 2014.
