Briefly describe the rationale for disestablishment:

Due to faculty attrition and changes in priorities, the faculty necessary to teach the two required courses for the certificate are no longer available.

Impact on other existing programs:

May include availability of course content for students in other majors who may need it; other.

None. The two required courses in this certificate are HON courses and are not part of other university curricula.

Impact on current students:

Estimate number of students still enrolled; anticipated date of last graduates; arrangements for continuing students and students in articulated transfer pathways (e.g., MAPP, TAG).

Approximately 40 students are currently pursuing the certificate. The anticipated date of the last graduates is Spring 2015. Students currently pursuing the certificate will continue to be advised on how they may complete the program. Course substitutions will be approved for these students if necessary. Other current students interested in this field of study will be advised to take related courses that are offered in various academic units throughout the university.

Additional information:

Provide any relevant information not required above that will assist in evaluating the proposal.

The current Director of the Philosophy, Politics and Law certificate is Associate Dean and Professor Mary Sigler of the Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law. She is supportive of the disestablishment of this certificate program due to the lack of faculty members remaining at the university who study this particular field of inquiry.
