Course description:

Requested designation: Humanities, Fine Arts and Design-HU

Note: a separate proposal is required for each designation requested

Eligibility:

Permanent numbered courses must have completed the university's review and approval process. For the rules governing approval of omnibus courses, contact the General Studies Program Office at (480) 965-0739.

Area(s) proposed course will serve:

A single course may be proposed for more than one core or awareness area. A course may satisfy a core area requirement and more than one awareness area requirements concurrently, but may not satisfy requirements in two core areas simultaneously, even if approved for those areas. With departmental consent, an approved General Studies course may be counted toward both the General Studies requirement and the major program of study.

Checklists for general studies designations:

Complete and attach the appropriate checklist:

- Literacy and Critical Inquiry core courses (L)
- Mathematics core courses (MA)
- Computer/statistics/quantitative applications core courses (CS)
- Humanities, Fine Arts and Design core courses (HU)
- Social and Behavioral Sciences core courses (SB)
- Natural Sciences core courses (SO/SG)
- Global Awareness courses (G)
- Historical Awareness courses (H)
- Cultural Diversity in the United States courses (C)

A complete proposal should include:

- Signed General Studies Program Course Proposal Cover Form
- Criteria Checklist for the area
- Course Syllabus
- Table of Contents from the textbook, and/or lists of course materials

Rationale and Objectives

The humanities disciplines are concerned with questions of human existence and meaning, the nature of thinking and knowing, with moral and aesthetic experience. The humanities develop values of all kinds by making the human mind more supple, critical, and expansive. They are concerned with the study of the textual and artistic traditions of diverse cultures, including traditions in literature, philosophy, religion, ethics, history, and aesthetics. In sum, these disciplines explore the range of human thought and its application to the past and present human environment. They deepen awareness of the diversity of the human heritage and its traditions and histories and they may also promote the application of this knowledge to contemporary societies.

The study of the arts and design, like the humanities, deepens the student’s awareness of the diversity of human societies and cultures. The fine arts have as their primary purpose the creation and study of objects, installations, performances and other means of expressing or conveying aesthetic concepts and ideas. Design study concerns itself with material objects, images and spaces, their historical development, and their significance in society and culture. Disciplines in the fine arts and design employ modes of thought and communication that are often nonverbal, which means that courses in these areas tend to focus on objects, images, and structures and/or on the practical techniques and historical development of artistic and design traditions. The past and present accomplishments of artists and designers help form the student’s ability to perceive aesthetic qualities of art work and design.

The Humanities, Fine Arts and Design are an important part of the General Studies Program, for they provide an opportunity for students to study intellectual and imaginative traditions and to observe and/or learn the production of art work and design. The knowledge acquired in courses fulfilling the Humanities, Fine Arts and Design requirement may encourage students to investigate their own personal philosophies or beliefs and to understand better their own social experience. In sum, the Humanities, Fine Arts and Design core area enables students to broaden and deepen their consideration of the variety of human experience.

Course Description
India is the home of many religions. Hinduism, her most ancient religion, claims its origins from the third millennium BCE and honors the proverbial number of 33 million goddesses and gods guiding devotees on their karmic journey towards salvation; Buddhism, that originated in India in the 6th century BCE, discourages the idea of a personified god and proclaims compassion and self-discipline as the path to the enlightenment and liberation from suffering for the Self; Islam has reached India as early as the 8th century and preaches prayer, charity and submission to the one Allah as the way to peace, wholeness, and paradise. Religious life in India was always dynamic — allowing for reform and the emergence of new religions such as Buddhism, Jainism and Sikhism — accommodating various Syrian, Orthodox, Catholic, and Protestant Christian denominations — and granting shelter and protection for persecuted religions such as Zoroastrianism and Judaism. India was however also always the site of religious conflicts and communal violence — seeing the militant division of the followers of the gods Vishnu and Shiva in medieval times — experiencing the gradual emergence of hostilities between Hindus and Muslims in colonial times — and facing recurring violence between Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, and Christians in its post-colonial presence today.

This course will introduce you to the vibrant religious plurality and enduring religious conflicts of India. We will look at historical backgrounds and contemporary events, study sacred books and ritual practices, contemplate local circumstances and global reverberations. Special topics will be: Hindu gods and castes; Muslim heritage and Sufi saints; Buddhist origins and Dalit ("Untouchable") revivalism; Indian Christians and Hindu-Catholic syncretism; religious acculturation and communalist conflict; modern Holy Men and urban religiosity; Indian religion and global diaspora.

The course will combine lecture, video and image analysis, and in class discussion. Modes of evaluation will include mid-term exam, media research paper, film reflection, and final paper.

Assignments and Grades

1) Class Participation. Class Participation will count for 10% of your grade. Class participation is NOT the same as class attendance. You are expected to take an active role in this class, discussing the reading and raising further topics of interest for discussion. For each day, who contributes to the discussion will get one or more points, who does not contribute will get zero point, who does not attend class will get negative points.

2) Media Research Paper, due February 6th, will count 15% of your grade. Find two or three current electronic articles in mainstream news media (such as New York Times, BBC, Reuters, Times of India, India Today) dealing with religious issues in contemporary India, submit a (500 to 700 words) commentary as to what they say about ‘religions of India’.

3) Midterm Exam on February 20th will count for 20% of your grade. It will be a 75 minutes in-class exam dealing with the material so far discussed in class. Its format will be four or five questions to be answered by bullet points, and four or five questions to be answered by mini-essay.

4) Film Reflection Paper, due March 20th, will count for 15% of your grade. Summarize and discuss the relations between the various religious traditions of India in a short paper (700 to 1000 words) that are portrayed in the two videos shown in class.

5) Final Paper Proposal, due March 27th, will count for 5% of your grade. It should have 300-400 words and present a working title, abstract and bibliography of your Final Paper project.

6) Oral Presentation of your paper in class on May 1st will count 5% of your grade.

7) Final Paper, due May 8th, will count for 30% of your grade. It shall be 2000-2500 words in length dealing with any one of the religious traditions or problems discussed in class. The topic is to be selected by you and approved by me. You may use sources dealt with in class, but should also use a substantial amount of self-researched new sources. Internet blogs and WIKIPEDIA are not acceptable sources for your paper. They may be used as examples of opinions, but not as representatives of factual statements. The final paper needs to be structured by; introduction, elaboration, conclusion and bibliography. All significant facts and arguments borrowed from bibliographic or electronic sources need to be referenced in the text by author name and year of the source. All figures and verbatim quotations need to be referenced in the text by author name, year and page number(s). All sources used in the text need to be evidenced in a bibliography at the end of the paper. The bibliography needs to follow an acknowledged academic style, for instance the one used in the Journal of Asian Studies or the Chicago Style.

All written assignments are to be submitted on blackboard assignments.

The papers in this book have grown out of a conference titled: ‘Lived Islam in South Asia: Adaptation, Liminality and Conflict’, held in Goa between 4 and 8 December 2002. Konrad Adenauer Foundation, Germany, initiated and organized this conference, as a part of a world-wide series of seminars and workshops called ‘Dialogue with Islam’.

Ever since its inception in the 1960s, Konrad Adenauer Foundation has been interested in initiating dialogues between different ideological positions. There were two main reasons for organizing the present conference. First, there has been an enormous body of literature on Islam in West Asia, largely due to the international focus on that region. By contrast, Islam in South Asia has not received its due attention. We hoped to correct this imbalance in some small way through this conference. It was not our intention however, to enter theological or political debates, but gain better understanding of how Islam was practised by a large section of the world’s population.

Second, since September 11, the quest for more knowledge about Islam has increased greatly, specially in the West. But together with this, there has also been a growth in dangerous stereotypes about the connection of Islam to violence. It seemed to us therefore, extremely important to dispel some of these misconceptions about such a large section of people who call themselves Muslims and try to

CONTENTS BY TRADITIONS

As explained in the introduction, this volume is organized thematically, rather than by tradition, in order to suggest the interactions, intersections, and confluences in the religious practices of India. It is useful, nonetheless, to see also how the works included in this volume might be organized by tradition. Such an organization presents certain difficulties, as evidenced by the title of chapter 45, “Satya Pīr: Muslim Holy Man and Hindu God,” which has been classed as “Hindu” below because Satya Pīr is more widely revered today by Hindus than by Muslims. There are three chapters, however, which are not listed below because they elude such classification: “Bāul Songs” (there are both Hindu and Muslim Bauls), “Tamil Song to God as Child” (with songs to Muhammad, Jesus, and Śiva’s son), and Kabir / Kabir (1398–1518) was an orphan raised by low-caste Hindu weavers who may have only recently converted to Islam. His guru was a devotee of Rāma. In his poetry, Kabir criticized both Hindus and Muslims. According to a popular story, upon his death his body was claimed by both Hindus and Muslims. When they pulled back his shroud they found only petals.

Popular Hinduism and Hindu Nationalism  262
The Sociopolitical Effects of Ideological Change: The Buddhist Conversion of Maharashtrian Untouchables

Jayashree B. Gokhale

On October 14, 1956, thousands of Maharashtrian Untouchables, led by Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (1891–1956), renounced their ancestral Hindu faith and converted en masse to Buddhism. This article treats the origins of that conversion, the institutions that were established as a result of it, the ideology that was formulated around it, and the processes of social change that followed it. The decision to break completely with Hinduism was a momentous one for an Untouchable community that occupied the lowest rungs of the Maharashtrian caste and class order. It meant both the repudiation of ideology and of the complex of social relationships that had developed around it. Hence the conversion had implications not only for individual and collective consciousness but also for relationships among other dalit (Marathi, "poor and downtrodden") communities and the wider society.

The Mahar community is notable in having produced B. R. Ambedkar, the instigator of the Buddhist conversion, the foremost Untouchable leader of modern times, and the chief architect of the Indian Constitution of 1950. In his own community, Ambedkar is revered as a savior; he has become the central symbol of the Mahar-Buddhist movement. Although many historical precedents for conversion by Untouchables to dissident Hindu traditions and other religions (Christianity and Islam) exist, the Buddhist conversion of 1956 was a unique instance in modern times; it was the first organized expression of dissatisfaction with the Hindu order that involved the determination to leave it. The Buddhist conversion of the Mahars represents in many Jayashree B. Gokhale is Visiting Research Scholar, South Asia Regional Studies, University of Pennsylvania.

This article is derived from a book manuscript being prepared for publication, entitled From Conversion to Confrontation: The Politics of an Indian Untouchable Community, based on the author's Ph.D. dissertation (Gokhale 1980). The author's research in India in 1976 was supported by a grant from McGill University; in 1981 her research was funded by a grant from the American Institute of Indian Studies. An earlier version of this article was delivered at the annual conference of the Association for Asian Studies, Washington, D.C., March 1984. She is grateful to B. C. Ghosh and William Boyer and to two anonymous reviewers of the earlier draft for helpful suggestions.

1 I have deliberately not used "Harijan" (Gandhi's term for Untouchable, meaning "children of God"). Mahar-Buddhists find this term demeaning and patronizing and do not use it themselves. I recognize that Buddhists will find the term "Mahar-Buddhist" inappropriate. My reasons for using that term will become apparent in this article; it says something about the meaning of the conversion, which has in some ways reinforced the ethnic identity of the Mahars. I also use dalit (Marathi, "poor and downtrodden"), which is the term of choice for many Untouchables and is an effort to transcend and oppose varna (caste) distinctions on the basis of class. In practice, dalit has become a euphemism for Untouchable, just as "Buddhist" (Marathi, Nava Buddha or Buddhha) is a euphemism for "Mahar." I also use "Scheduled Caste" (SC), the appellation used by the Indian Government to refer to Untouchables.
Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar: Rebel against Hindu Tradition

BALKRISHNA GOVIND GOKHALE

Wake Forest University, Winston Salem, North Carolina, U.S.A.

FOR ALMOST three decades (1928–1956) Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar (1891–1956) was an unrelenting challenge to Hindu dogma and social practices. To most political leaders, including M. K. Gandhi (1869–1948) and Jawaharlal Nehru (1889–1964), he was a troublesome spectre casting a menacing shadow over their grand national designs. To the orthodox Hindu he was anathema, an “untouchable” who persistently refused “to keep his place.” To millions of his followers he was a “father figure,” Babasaheb as he was fondly and reverently addressed, a veritable saviour vindicating their human rights and heroically striving to lift them out of the mire of poverty and degradation into which the Hindu social system had cast them. Cram-full of facts, vitriolic in his denunciations, unbending in his personal and general likes and dislikes, tireless in his energy and prophetic in his pronouncements, Ambedkar symbolised a unique phenomenon in the political and social history of modern India.

It is too early to deliver definitive judgment on the longevity and vitality of Ambedkar’s impact upon Hinduism. In its characteristic way Hinduism epitomised him as its “modern Manu” and promptly laid his ghost to rest. Ambedkar had challenged Hinduism where it was most vulnerable, the caste system and its correlate—untouchability. The bastions of the system have begun to show cracks, but it will be a long time before they will crumble if recent studies are any indication.1 As his final riposte, Ambedkar led millions of his followers into a new religion (Buddhism) in October 1956 in the hope that they would escape the tyranny of the caste system thereby. But in hundreds of villages in Maharashtra they simply seem to have exchanged one label for another, for now they are taken to be “untouchable” Buddhists!2

Crossroads of Religions: Shrines, Mobility and Urban Space in Goa

ALEXANDER HENN

Abstract

Wayside shrines — representing Hindu and Catholic divinities and saints — show an astonishing dynamic in the cities of Goa and India. Not only do they persist in a milieu of drastic modern change that often seems to be at odds with their traditional locations, aesthetics and purposes, but also some of them surpass temples, churches and mosques in popularity. The popularity of these seemingly marginal religious monuments is a response to three forms of mobility characterizing modern Indian urban environments: cultural mobility — the diversification and fluctuation of religious ideas and practices; social mobility — the diversification and fluctuation of people from different castes, social classes and geographical regions, as well as the change of caste and class status due to socio-economic change; and physical mobility — the movement of and movement around increasingly dense and complex flows of motorized traffic. The shrines modify and transform the centuries-old spatio-religious system of Hindus and Catholics to fit the conditions of late-modern city life. They allow a culturally diversifying, socially changing and geographically fluctuating population to engage with a variety of personalized deities and saints whose charismatic authority is not only quite independent from formalized local social hierarchies, but often also cuts across orthodox divisions between religious traditions.

Introduction

One of the most conspicuous errors of modern social theory has been the assumption that modernity would gradually eliminate religion from the public sphere. This indicates that modernization theory and Marxist theory both erred considerably in arguing that religion would retreat into the private sphere of individual belief or be replaced by the demystifying objectivity of scientific rationalism. Notably, however, the evidence today showing that this prognosis was wrong comes not only from a late-modern ‘religious resurgence’ (Sabiliyeh, 1990), which raises concerns about an increase in religious conflicts and violence in many parts of the world (Juergensmeyer, 2000). Arguably, significant proof of the fact that religion is standing its ground in modernity can also be found in its persistence and growth in many cities where, at times, it plays a rather reconciling and appeasing role (Mayaram, 2005).

In order to argue the case for the persistence of religion in the modern urban space, in this article I explore wayside shrines in the cities of Goa. Goa, to begin with, marks a special region within the Indian nation (Newman, 1988). Its peculiarity is owed to the fact that it was under Portuguese rule and Catholic hegemony for almost half a millennium.

I owe thanks to Alito Siquiera MA for his continuous support in my research in Goa. Jose Loureiro deserves gratitude for helping me locate and understand some fine shrines in Margao. I also thank Gabriele Henn for contributing the photographs.

Religion in India

T. N. Madan

In India, religion is like an axis that transforms as it turns, propelling society through history. Religion’s many expressions—the Sikh, Jain, Hindu, Buddhist, Sant, and Muslim traditions—radiate like spokes, connecting with the social in one great wheel of the universe. The ways of dharma, karma, and bhakti enact its movement in everyday life; with secularism and pluralism, both evolving from these principles, Nehru and Mahatma Gandhi built the nation. Through its historical landscape, Indian society accompanies the spiritual in the same way that, according to an ancient text, a person’s fortune sits, rises, and moves with him through life.

SHADOWS OF THE SWASTIKA:

HISTORICAL REFLECTIONS ON THE POLITICS OF HINDU COMMUNALISM

TAPAN RAYCHAUDHURI

This article is an attempt to locate the recent upsurge of Hindu communalist politics in India in its long-term historical context. It draws on the research of other academics and journalists, especially with regard to the recent activities of the Hindu communalist organizations. It agrees with those who question theories ascribing the appeal of fanaticism to the essential nature of Indian society or the power of ethnicity. It is with regard to the reasons for such appeal that this article offers a series of hypotheses that differ from those currently in vogue.

On 6 December 1992, a sixteenth-century mosque in the medieval town of Ayodhya was destroyed in broad daylight by a fanatic Hindu mob. This was the culmination of a campaign launched by the Sangh Parivar, that is “the family” (incidentally, the term has a delightful Sicilian resonance) of organizations built around the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh, ostensibly a cultural organization meant to propagate and nurture Hindu values. The RSS was banned for some time after the assassination of Mahatma Gandhi partly because it was suspected of complicity in the crime. Its leader, Golwalkar, was imprisoned but had to be released eventually because the evidence in the hands of the state prosecutor was not enough to prove in a court of law his responsibility for the assassina-

Abstract

Life itself is a market. Giving and taking, bargaining and speculating, is part of the game. Life has its ... profits and losses appreciation and balance sheets. But the giving of Bhakti [devotion] in exchange for Mukti [liberation] is the most powerful business of all.—Sathya Sai Baba (Gokak, V.K. 1975. Bhagavan Sri Sathya Sai Baba, an Interpretation. Krishna Abhinav Publications, New Delhi, p. 237)

It is your imperative duty to strive for the preservation of dharma. Today some people are trying to uproot Bharatiya Dharma (Indian Religion). We must resist all such attempts.... There are some people who are blindly enamored of Modern Western Civilization.... These so-called spurious and self-styled social reformers are trying to pollute society by depriving it of dharma.—Sathya Sai Baba (Gokak, V.K. 1975, Bhagavan Sri Sathya Sai Baba, an Interpretation. Krishna Abhinav Publications, New Delhi, p. 246)

With his chubby cherubic face, cast in a seeming eternal smile and surrounded by a mass of curly black hair, Sathya Sai Baba (b. 1926) stands out as perhaps India’s most recognisable, most popular and most infamous of gurus. Known above all for his miraculous powers and his apparent ability to produce all variety of material objects, sweets, jewelry and trinkets out of nothingness, Sai Baba has quickly become among the most powerful religious leaders, particularly among India’s affluent, well-educated middle classes. Any traveler in India knows that his image, displayed on posters, billboards, postcards and book jackets, is inescapable and that he is surely one of the most dominant cultural icons in all of the subcontinent. It has been said, not unbelievably, that the only person in India who can draw larger crowds than Sai Baba is the Prime

The Sai Baba Movement: Approaches to the Study of Indian Saints

CHARLES S. J. WHITE

THE time has long since passed when scholars of Indian religion should have begun to consider seriously the nature of Indian sainthood and more particularly the so-called “living saints.” As it is, the knowledgeable reader has very little choice of published material upon which to base his judgments. For many of the living saints there is a fairly extensive body of apologetic writing. In the nature of primary sources such works are invaluable but remain unanalyzed. There are also publications available in the occult market; but there the motives of the writers differ from those of scholarly inquiry in many cases, however interesting their contributions may be in their own right. Analytical works on modern Hinduism and its saint leadership are negligible in number. Of course we fare rather better when it comes to the literary saints of the middle ages in various parts of the land and in different traditions. But regarding them, there is often little biographical material that one can be certain of, while the traditions concerning their lives, teachings and poetry achieve the same kind of stylization that one notices in rows of identical icons in a temple.

Regarding the living saints, what is presently most necessary is that there should be thorough reporting of their behavior, preferably from first hand observation, and an objective clarification of their biographies according to certain motifs and structures. The specifically religious nature of their activities must also be investigated. In respect to that, what follows is the development of a study begun several years ago of some living saints in the Poona and Bangalore regions who together constitute a homogeneous group that I have called, The Sai Baba Movement.

The author will attempt in this paper to present sufficient data on these saints, including whatever relates to their interconnections so that we have some basis on which to make a claim, however limited in scope, that we can “understand” them. In due course we shall also attempt to sort out the more general methodological criteria which, on the basis of our study, appear necessary for the task of interpretation and also to point out the difficulties which certain judgments impose upon the satisfaction of our desire to understand.

Construction

To begin with let me say that I do not think it is feasible here to sum up everything that can be known regarding the Sai Baba Movement. It is, nevertheless, possible to begin to point out lines of approach to the question of these contemporary religious figures. As with so much else in Indian religion the origins are lost in antiquity but preserved in the flesh and blood of the living cult, even if to a degree
