HST 436: The Soviet Experiment

Course Description

HST 436 introduces students to the “Soviet experiment” – the history of the Soviet Union, from the October Revolution of 1917 to the collapse of the USSR in 1991 and its aftermath. The course begins with a survey of the political and social structure of late Tsarist Russia, then proceeds to World War I, the February and October Revolutions, the Civil War, the NEP and initial efforts at social remodeling, the victory of Stalinism, collectivization and industrial planning, the Stalinist Terror, the ordeal of World War II, the Cold War and the spread of the Stalinist model, Khrushchev and Destalinization, the Brezhnev stagnation, Gorbachev, Perestroika and Glasnost, the end of the USSR, the transition to capitalism and democracy, and the “nationalities” question in post-Soviet Russia. In addition to the authoritative textbook by John Thompson, A Vision Unfulfilled, students are introduced to the critical use of a wide variety of source material: archival documents, oral histories, private correspondence, underground fiction, photography, posters, and films.

Meeting Social and Behavioral Sciences Criteria

HST 436 meets the criteria for the General Studies “Social and Behavioral Sciences” designation by (1) by advancing basic understanding and knowledge of human interaction in and through one of the key episodes of all modern history, the 70-year saga of the USSR; (2) by bringing the tools of a wide variety of social sciences – history, political science, cultural geography, economics, and sociology – to bear on the understanding and explanation of the history of the Soviet Union; and (3) by particularly stressing the role of the critical examination of very different kinds of primary sources in historical understanding and explanation.

Arizona State University Criteria Checklist for SOCIAL AND BEHAVIORAL SCIENCES [SB]

Rationale and Objectives

The importance of the social and behavioral sciences is evident in both the increasing number of scientific inquiries into human behavior and the amount of attention paid to those inquiries. In both private and public sectors people rely on social scientific findings to assess the social consequences of large-scale economic, technological, scientific, and cultural changes.

Social scientists' observations about human behavior and their unique perspectives on human events make an important contribution to civic dialogue. Today, those insights are particularly crucial due to the growing economic and political interdependence among nations.

Courses proposed for General Studies designation in the Social and Behavioral Sciences area must demonstrate emphases on: (1) social scientific theories and principles, (2) the methods used to acquire knowledge about cultural or social events and processes, and (3) the impact of social scientific understanding on the world.

Proposer: Please complete the following section and attach appropriate documentation.

HIS 436: THE SOVIET EXPERIMENT (SPRING 2008)

COURSE DESCRIPTION: for most of the 20th century, the Soviet Union was the main enemy of the United States. Citizens of the U.S.S.R. lived under a political and economic system that was defined as the antithesis of capitalism and democracy. The Marxist revolutionaries who seized power in 1917 set out to transform every aspect of Russian life as they attempted to build the world's first communist utopia. This course will explore how successful they were, focusing on both how Soviet citizens were effected by and contributed to these changes. Beginning with the origins of the 1917 Russian revolution and concluding with a discussion of the consequences of communism's legacy for post-Soviet Russia, major issues we will examine include: whether the communists were successful in eradicating Russia's pre-revolutionary past, social support for the Bolshevik regime, the imposition of Stalinist terror from above and below, collectivization of agriculture, cultural revolution, the role of ideology, the relationship between Marxist theory and practice. heroism in war. industrialization and the black market, social structure in a Aclassless@ society, communist attitudes toward gender, whether communism served as a religion, the function of propaganda and education, dissent, the rise of the Soviet Union to world power status, attempts at reform, the rise of ethnic nationalism, the ultimate demise of the Soviet empire, and how Russians today view the Soviet experiment. To explore these themes we will examine a wide variety of interdisciplinary sources. These include: translations of recently released secret archival documents that reflect how the state operated in practice; official speeches and treatises that are indicative of government ideology; underground fiction, which is representative of how intellectuals conceived of the Soviet experiment and how it affected their art; memoirs, oral histories, letters and interviews of a wide range of Soviet citizens published both within the Soviet Union and abroad, demonstrating how varied the attitudes of the rank and file were and how they both adopted, shaped and resisted official ideology. In class we will also watch a Russian language sub-titled film, observe the changing images of Soviet political iconography by viewing propaganda posters, compare these images to photographs of Soviet reality, and tap the pulse of popular culture by listening to the music and reading the lyrics of popular underground songs.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS: The course format consists of each class divided into part lecture, part discussion. The lectures and discussions are intended to compliment rather than duplicate assigned readings. Therefore, regular attendance is required, and students are not only expected, but also required, to participate actively in class discussions. Reading must be completed for the day it is assigned. Come to class ready to discuss what you've read. When you are reading, note passages that strike you as particularly intriguing or questionable. Feel free to ask questions if something is unclear, or better yet, if you disagree with either the text or the lecturer. On the days when we will be discussing primary sources, please bring these texts to class. Class participation grades can be bolstered by performing in the Soviet propaganda skit that we will perform in class and our reenactment of the Soviet economy.

Your grade will be determined on the basis of:

Mid-Term Exam	25%
Six to eight page paper on women=s memoirs	25%
