Mandatory Review
Rationale and Objectives

The importance of the social and behavioral sciences is evident in both the increasing number of scientific inquiries into human behavior and the amount of attention paid to those inquiries. In both private and public sectors people rely on social scientific findings to assess the social consequences of large-scale economic, technological, scientific, and cultural changes.

Social scientists' observations about human behavior and their unique perspectives on human events make an important contribution to civic dialogue. Today, those insights are particularly crucial due to the growing economic and political interdependence among nations.

Courses proposed for General Studies designation in the Social and Behavioral Sciences area must demonstrate emphases on: (1) social scientific theories and principles, (2) the methods used to acquire knowledge about cultural or social events and processes, and (3) the impact of social scientific understanding on the world.

SYLLABUS

Course Description

This course is designed to explore the diversity of African people and culture from an interdisciplinary perspective. Those societies covered range from simple foraging and traditional ones to complex, industrializing nations. Special emphasis is placed on basic social, political, and economic relations, inequality, world-view, art, resource use and development, gender roles, slavery and slave trade, Europe and Africa, processes of change, and the impact and legacy of colonial rule are considered. How relationships between men and women are contextualized and negotiated is a theme found throughout the readings and films, as well as struggle of people in different circumstances to build new relationships with traditional beliefs and practices. The course meets social/behavioral, historical and global requirements.

Approaches to the course material and Examination

In learning about Africa, the themes transcend local events and personalities to reveal recurrent patterns of historical change that extend throughout the continent. The thematic approach means students studying the first weeks’ lectures and readings carefully to identify the “key themes” that will develop during the remainder of the term. It also means that the examination will test students’ abilities to draw these themes together into a coherent understanding on how and why people in Africa behaved as they did, both in their distinctiveness and in ways comparable to history in more familiar parts of the globe.
The course will follow four complementary approaches: (1) the lectures provide overviews of large themes and periods; they illustrate general points with examples and case studies. The lectures thus present the instructor’s interpretation of the subject but make no systematic attempt at comprehensive coverage; (2) the readings which are to be completed before the week for which they appear in the syllabus, provide detail and texture to the themes covered in lecture; (3) class discussions give students opportunity to contribute and ask questions about parts of the readings and lectures that either confuse or inspire their interest. (4) Finally, examinations consist of 3 sets of multiple-choice questions and short answers, an in-class map quiz, and a 15 pages paper.

Requirements

Research Paper

Students will be required to research and report in written and oral form on an individual, group, or issue of cultural or historical concern relevance to Africa. The topic may include a subject(s) (non-American) of history (e.g., Osei Tutu, Shaka Zulu, Sundiata, Imhotep, Queen Amina, the Ashanti, the Yoruba, Dogon, Obafemi Awolowo, Nnamdi Azikwe, Jomo Kenyata, Kwame Nkruma, Julius Nyerere), or other important issues of relevance (e.g., culture, including marriage, religion, art, music, dance; ecology; economy; AIDS; droughts; migration; civil wars; and development). Students must obtain the instructor’s agreement for their topics by the end of the third week of class. The paper assignment should include the following:

Titles, introduction, main issues, conclusion
Relevant geographical and demographic information
Importance to African civilization
Importance to the world civilization
Most important contribution
Lesson learned (personal)

For your paper, use 12 point, Times New Roman font, with no more than 1.25” margins. Include in-text references, and bibliographic references at the end. Plagiarism and other form of cheating will result in automatic failure, and may lead to students facing serious penalties imposed by the University. The topic or title of your research paper is DUE in my office latest February 10. Your title or topic must include your name, student identification number, and a half-to-one-page description of your topic; stating why you chose the topic, your methodology, sources to be used, etc. Please, submit hardcopy. No electronic submission. I would also advise everyone to meet with me at least once in the semester to discuss progress report of your paper. Final paper is DUE May 5

Exams

In addition to the research paper, there will be one in-class map quiz, two in-class tests, and a final exam. Tests and the final will consist of multiple choice and short answer type questions to come from both assigned readings and class lectures. Make-ups will be given only when exams are missed for unavoidable reasons, and when you provide documentation either before or immediately after the examination date. Sometimes it becomes necessary to make changes in the assignment schedule and requirements of the course. It is your responsibility to be in class if and when such announcements are made.

Attendance: You can miss three classes for free, after that you lose the 10% points. Attendance will be taking regularly in class. Please notify me if you need to miss class because of sickness, a religious holiday, or some other legitimate excusable reason. (This does not include extra-curricular events, work for other classes, etc.). You must also view the African videos. Video day should be treated as regular lecture day. Contents in the videos are part of your exams.

Participation—Any questions, observations or discussion you can contribute to make the class more interesting and relevant will count. Consistent constructive participation will push borderline grades up (i.e. if you have a high B it can become an A). You don’t have to participate in every class but you need to show some interest.

Your primary responsibility as a student is to attend class regularly and master the material presented in class and in the readings. If you have ANY questions or feel unclear of any class material, see me after class or during office hours. DON’T wait until the end of the semester to discuss your problem.

Graduate Requirements

Students registered for graduate credit are expected to perform at graduate levels. Graduate students are expected to exhibit leadership in class discussion and may be asked to comment on key issues raised in class. In addition to class attendance, readings and participation in discussion, graduate students will do a 20-25 pages research on a topic approved by me, as well as a ten-page review of a scholarly book on Africa (Clear all books and topics with me in advance).
