Eligibility: Courses must have a current Course Equivalency Guide (CEG) evaluation. Courses evaluated as NT (non-transferable) are not eligible for the General Studies Program.

Mandatory Review:
- The above specified course is undergoing Mandatory Review for the following Core or Awareness Area (only one area is permitted; if a course meets more than one Core or Awareness Area, please submit a separate Mandatory Review Cover Form for each Area).

Policy: The General Studies Council (GSC) Policies and Procedures requires the review of previously approved community college courses every five years, to verify that they continue to meet the requirements of Core or Awareness Areas already assigned to these courses. This review is also necessary as the General Studies program evolves.

Area(s) Proposed Course Will Serve: A course may be proposed for more than one core or awareness area. Although a course may satisfy a core area requirement and an awareness area requirement concurrently, a course may not be used to satisfy requirements in two core or awareness areas simultaneously, even if approved for those areas. With departmental consent, an approved General Studies course may be counted toward both the General Studies requirements and the major program of study.

5. Please select either a core area or an awareness area:
   - Core Areas: Humanities, Arts and Design (HU)
   - Awareness Areas: Select awareness area...

Rationale and Objectives

The humanities disciplines are concerned with questions of human existence and meaning, the nature of thinking and knowing, with moral and aesthetic experience. The humanities develop values of all kinds by making the human mind more supple, critical, and expansive. They are concerned with the study of the textual and artistic traditions of diverse cultures, including traditions in literature, philosophy, religion, ethics, history, and aesthetics. In sum, these disciplines explore the range of human thought and its application to the past and present human environment. They deepen awareness of the diversity of the human heritage and its traditions and histories and they may also promote the application of this knowledge to contemporary societies.

The study of the arts and design, like the humanities, deepens the student’s awareness of the diversity of human societies and cultures. The arts have as their primary purpose the creation and study of objects, installations, performances and other means of expressing or conveying aesthetic concepts and ideas. Design study concerns itself with material objects, images and spaces, their historical development, and their significance in society and culture. Disciplines in the arts and design employ modes of thought and communication that are often nonverbal, which means that courses in these areas tend to focus on objects, images, and structures and/or on the practical techniques and historical development of artistic and design traditions. The past and present accomplishments of artists and designers help form the student’s ability to perceive aesthetic qualities of art work and design.

The Humanities, Arts and Design are an important part of the General Studies Program, for they provide an opportunity for students to study intellectual and imaginative traditions and to observe and/or learn the production of art work and design. The knowledge acquired in courses fulfilling the Humanities, Arts and Design requirement may encourage students to investigate their own personal philosophies or beliefs and to understand better their own social experience. In sum, the Humanities, Arts and Design core area enables students to broaden and deepen their consideration of the variety of human experience.

ASU - [HU] CRITERIA

The following types of courses are excluded from the [HU] designation even though they might give some consideration to the humanities, arts and design:

- Courses devoted primarily to developing skill in the use of a language.
- Courses devoted primarily to the acquisition of quantitative or experimental methods.
- Courses devoted primarily to teaching skills.
Explain in detail which student activities correspond to the specific designation criteria. Please use the following organizer to explain how the criteria are being met.

4a. Concerns the development of human thought, with emphasis on the analysis of philosophical and/or religious systems of thought.

"Sports," a word derived from the 14th Century word "disport," originally referred to what could transport individuals away from harsh reality into a carefree world. However, sports throughout history have come to be closely intertwined with the realities, issues, and questions of life. The perception of sports has evolved from the "survival of the fittest" philosophy of Charles Darwin and Herbert Spencer, to the Marxist denouncement of sports as a way to maintain control over the masses, to the "Muscular Christianity" ethos of Henry David Thoreau and Ralph Waldo Emerson to the affirmation of the "Protestant Work Ethic" to the embrace of "The American Dream."

The earliest sporting events were religious in nature as sports then and now address the mind and spirit, not the physical needs of survival, offer paradigms of coherence, stability, and progress, feature creation stories, heroes and villains, redemption and falls from grace, rituals, role models, and myths.

ENH 140AA is far from an objective history of athletes throwing and catching balls. Instead, it is a humanistic record of how sports have advanced the cause of egalitarianism in American society. In the early 1900s Jack Johnson was dubbed the "Negro Heavyweight Champion" because he was not allowed to fight white opponents in America. When he defeated a white Canadian champion, Tommy Burns, newspapers raged against Johnson because he was now the black champion, so James Jeffries, a white heavyweight agreed to fight Johnson, encouraged by Jack London to do so because "The white race must be rescued," his sentiments echoed by novelist Rex Beach that Jeffries would win because of his "breeding and education." When Johnson triumphed in 1910, it sent shock waves throughout America that a black man could stand toe to toe with a white man and win in a contest now of equals: "Johnson stood proudly at the summit, and symbolically, millions of African-Americans stood beside him. For Johnson and his people, the championship seemed a partial but promising fulfillment of their collective hopes and dreams, a portent of a future brighter than their troubled past and present." Similarly, when Jackie Robinson became the first African-American Major League baseball player, his arrival signified more than a black man with good hitting and catching skills. "He was truly a historic figure, using the nation's most popular game as a means of breaking down racial stereotypes and taboos. As such he did much to prepare the nation for the civil rights movement that would soon take wing." (Davies)

When the heavily favored Bobby Riggs took on Billie Jean King in a 1973 tennis match after Riggs had commented that his victory would put "Billy Jean and all the other women libers back where they belong - in the kitchen and the bedroom," a record TV audience watched her one-sided win which "set the stage for an upsurge of popularity of women's tennis and is considered an important step in the rise of acceptance of all women's sports." (Davies) Similarly when Title IX was passed in 1972, few at the time understood its importance in ensuring equality for women in athletic programs nationwide. More importantly, since "sports had enabled boys to acquire the qualities needed to assume eadership roles in adult society, girls were now being given the same opportunities...undercutting the social hierarchies that have historically granted men greater authority in political, economic, religious, family and athletic matters." (Davies)

Just as the Baltimore Ravens' Ray Rice's brutalization of his fiancee dramatized domestic abuse all across social media, so did the revelation by Michael Sam in the NFL and Jason Collins in the NBA that they were gay helped publicize the movement
4b. Concerns aesthetic systems and values especially in literature, arts, and design.

For acceptance of gay rights in the United States. Clearly, sports are more than games - they are and have always been the focal point for exposing social problems in America and encouraging a nationwide humanist debate.

4c. Emphasizes aesthetic experience and creative process in literature, arts and design.

Though ostensibly they all deal with characters striving to achieve their best in a sports oriented world, it is not possible to read and discuss The Natural, Death of a Salesman, Fences, and "Shoeless Joe Jackson Comes To Iowa" without recognition of the human values that drive them. A closer analysis of their narrative strategies will reveal the overriding societal mores that shape and determine their fates, but their individual struggles on the playing field are our struggles written large, metaphorically undergoing the trials and tribulations of life we all share existentially.

By deconstructing these literary works and by comparing and contrasting them, students will look at sports in a new way, as less of a contest of athletes in combat on a playing field, and more of the character of people searching for expansive meaning within carefully designed boundaries, and at the same time learning to appreciate the artistic decisions made by their creators to involve the reader by creating a consistent and realistic environment through various narrative strategies to heighten the reader's sensation and virtual participation.

[[ Sample Questions:

1. TRUE or FALSE: In both the world of movies and sports, at first the power resided with the owners and management, but movies and sports gained their highest popularity when the power shifted to the individual star whom people identify with and will pay to see.

2. What do sports narratives and religion have in common?
   A) They are not necessary for physical survival like food and water, but they nourish the spirit
   B) They offer a diversion from the routine and anxieties of modern life
   C) In a world of chaos and unpredictability, they offer a sense of stability and structure
   D) They offer role models to admire, emulate, and inspire
   E) All of the above

F) The leaders of both institutions wear hats, sometimes funny ones.

3. TRUE or FALSE: Team sports evolved from individual ones as society evolved from single farmers working on a single farm to today's more interconnected workplace where the "team" is more important than any one individual.

4. The rules governing sports are similar to the rules governing overall society in what way?
   A) They change daily, they are created and known only by those in power, and they are unpopular
   B) They are rarely enforced, they seem arbitrary, and there are no appeals
   C) Ideally, they apply equally to all, they are known by all, and they are essentially accepted by all
   D) Unwritten rules will always be more important than written ones
   E) All of the above

THE ELEMENTS OF WRITING ABOUT LITERATURE AND FILM

Elizabeth McMahan
Robert Funk
Susan Day
Preface

This slim text contains the essentials for understanding and writing about literature and film. Despite its brevity, the book is comprehensive. Everything beginning students need to know in order to appreciate and write well about literature and film is here, clearly explained and abundantly illustrated.

The literary approach is mainly traditional (formalist), but reader response (subjective) critics will find that this book incorporates their insights as well. The chapter on film, which dovetails with the chapters on fiction, poetry, and drama, offers ample explanations of techniques that make the study of film unique. In the chapters devoted to writing instruction, film receives equal treatment with fiction, poetry, and drama.

The text is divided into two parts. The first section, "Analyzing Literature and Film," explains in four chapters how to go about understanding fiction, poetry, drama, and film. The second part, "Writing About Literature and Film," provides instruction in conventional literary writing and also encourages the use of writing during all phases of literary study—annotating texts, taking notes, jotting down reactions, drafting responses, writing to explore ideas. That is, it encourages writing as a mode of learning, as a means of sharpening critical thinking. Of course, it also includes traditional instruction on finding an approach, devising a thesis, organizing the ideas, and maintaining a critical focus, as well as offering advice about drafting, revising, quoting, documenting, proofreading, and editing.
