The Council of Academic Advisors (CAA) is a professional organization available to Arizona State University employees who are involved in or connected with the academic advising field. CAA's primary purpose is the improvement of academic advising at ASU. It pursues this purpose through professional development for its members, through representative participation university-wide in activities which have potential effect on academic policies and procedures, and through activities that contribute to the recognition by the university community of the importance of academic advising at the university and the professional nature of that activity.

Primary Membership is available to ASU employees who meet one of the following criteria: consider themselves to be "academic advisors" by virtue of their job title, job description, and/or primary employment responsibilities, have as a primary employment responsibility the direct supervision of academic advisors and/or coordination of academic advising programs. Privileges of primary membership include voting privileges on official CAA matters and the privilege of running for elected office within the CAA organization.

Affiliate Membership is available to ASU employees who are not described in the primary membership criteria but who are supportive of CAA's mission and wish to keep informed of the organization's activities. Affiliate members are encouraged to attend CAA meetings, participate in discussion of issues at those meetings, and receive CAA memos, notices, any other publications by virtue of inclusion on organization mailing lists.

To become a member and sign up for the weekly CAA Digest, please email CofAA@asu.edu your name and primary campus.
